October at Ferris Hills

October is over and Halloween has passed, but many forget that Halloween is just the first of the three-day religious observance, ortriduum, of Allhallowtide. Halloween falls the evening before All Saints' Day, also known as All Hallows' Day, on November 1. This Christian festival commemorates all the saints, known and unknown, famous and obscure. It is a day that highlights the spiritual bond between the dead in heaven and the living, and these saints' intercessions on our behalf. The third day of the triduum, All Souls' Day, falls on November 2. This is a day that commemorates the souls of all the faithfully departed.

October at Ferris Hills

Allhallowtide is celebrated all around the world, but perhaps the most famous iteration of this holiday is Mexico's Day of the Dead, or Dia de Muertos. Before the arrival of Spanish explorers in the 16th century, this Aztec festival was celebrated annually at the start of summer as a rite worshipping the goddess Mictecacihuatl, the Queen of the Underworld. But the Spaniards brought Catholicism with them, including the tradition of Allhallowtide, and soon the Mexican tradition was moved to coincide with the Catholic holiday. Similar to All Souls' Day, this national holiday in Mexico is a time to remember those who have passed. It is a lively celebration, with plenty of food and drink, as well as traditions of leaving marigolds and calaveras, ornate skulls made of sugar, as offerings to the deceased.

Laughter is timeless. Imagination has no age.
And dreams are forever.
